

Washington State Genealogical Society

recognizes

Edith (Tyler) Clarida

of Wenatchee, Washington for exceptional and consistent support of the goals and operation of Wenatchee Area Genealogical Society

Edith Clarida shows in so many ways her total dedication to the Wenatchee Area Genealogical Society. She works on acquisitions and accessions. By binding journal and bulletin files, and rearranging the library she has made space for more materials to be added. She has walked the Wenatchee City Cemetery to help clarify where people are buried. Her indexing of the Jones and Jones Funeral records makes available valuable information to local researchers as well as those from out of the area. A World War One Memorial has been relocated to the Wenatchee City Cemetery. Edith and another Society member are researching the many names that are listed on the memorial. She helped put together a number of Society scrapbooks, photocopied the material, and made covers for them. She spearheaded updating of the Society's by-laws – a long overdue project – and served as assistant to the editor of the Society's quarterly journal. She threw herself wholeheartedly into last year's cultural fair at the Wenatchee Valley Museum & Cultural Center; co-chairing the Society's Committee. Seasonal decorations appear in the genealogy library, thanks to Edith. The Society celebrated its 40th Anniversary with a lovely afternoon party put together and carried out largely by Edith and one other member. Edith Clarida is a very special lady, and we are thankful for her untiring support and leadership.

Given this 17th day of September in the year 2011, at the annual meeting of Washington State Genealogical Society at Richland, Washington.
